

LOCAVORIUS CASEOPHILE

(Otherwise known as the Artisanal Cheese Lover)

Viridis sciurus I – a paradox among caseophiles, “The Green Squirrel” is a fanatical hoarder of natural energy yet a legendary minimalist. Often spotted holding bi-weekly garage sales and bribing neighbours with tubs of feta to enlist their help with future solar panel-installations.

Caput obsidere – recognized for its culinary prowess, obsession with traceability of ingredients and voluminous cheese purchases, this species is the most celebrated among cheese mongers and can often be heard humming its signature caseophile tribute song “Oh Cape Vessey, What a Friend We Have In Cheeses.”

Venator ordenatrum bibere – recognized by its twitchy thumb, this species is renowned among cheesists as “The Beer Hunter” and is readily spotted throughout South Eastern Ontario tracking micro-breweries via GPS.

Convivium do are twitterus – found in the popular Facebook group “Julie McCoy, Your Cruise Director” issuing fondue party invitations, this species is often observed eating its breakfast of cheese cubes packed in a cocktail napkin.

Tantillus urbagricola – this urban farming caseophile is often overheard bragging about the size of its zucchinis on Friday Karaoke nights at the Gladstone Hotel. Correct positioning of its backyard chicken flock is frequently a source of hot debate among Urbagricolas, many believing that the chickens’ unobstructed view of the CN Tower renders a yolkie egg perfect for hollandaise sauce.
